Dear Art:

It is my understanding that all the equipment has been delivered and is in working order. [redacted] tells me that you would like a few additional parts which we will supply. Also, one of our men will come out to the Coast again to review the equipment with [redacted]

Dear Jim:

I understand that the equipment arrived in good shape at Palo Alto but based on conversations with [] I learned that there are certain problems in connection with the operation of it. [] tells me that certain corrective action is needed which I understand will be taken care of within approximately three weeks when some of your technical people return to Palo Alto.

Under the circumstances, since it does not appear that the equipment is fully operational (at least insofar as that portion of it which is intended to be operational), I will hold the DD-250 form here in my office. I will sign it and send it to you just as soon as I get an indication from our technical representative that the equipment is fully acceptable.

Very truly yours,

Dear Art:

Enclosed are two copies of a DD250 form prepared to cover the equipment supplied in accordance with Item 8.1 of the Work Statement.

Paragraph II of the contract indicates that delivery of the equipment will be at Palo Alto, California. Therefore, it seemed advisable that I have in my files a record of the buyer's acceptance. This can be accomplished by your signing blank "B" of the DD250 and returning one copy to me.

Very truly yours,
